So much uncertainty and growing bearishness but markets are holding key technical levels

Markets dislike uncertainty and there is certainly plenty of uncertainty for investors to digest regarding default risk at China's largest property developer aptly named Evergrande, ongoing US debt ceiling and spending bill gamesmanship, changing US central bank policy and worries about slowing earnings growth.

With all the uncertainty listed above, is it that surprising to see the S&P pull back from the upper end of its 12-year uptrend? We don't think so. Of course, it is always difficult to forecast the exact date and magnitude of a pullback, even as technical analysts. On the following pages we focus on the key levels that we think markets are likely to react to in the coming weeks. While corrections can be unnerving, we would encourage investors to view pullbacks as part of the normal ebb and flow of a secular bull market and to review their portfolios to ensure they are balanced and well positioned to take advantage of any further volatility heading into Q4.

Short-term trading indicators are now oversold following the recent market correction.

Investors are understandably unnerved by the S&P breaking below the widely watched blue 50-day moving average on Monday. Interestingly, the S&P 500 is now attempting to hold at next support near its yellow 100-day moving average near 4300. In addition, our custom short-term indicator in the bottom panel, along with many other widely followed trading indicators, are at suitably oversold levels to support a rebound. What likely happens if the S&P is unable to hold near current levels as we expect? A break below the recent lows near 4300 would likely see further weakness toward the next support band near the 200-day ma around 4100.

Are investors becoming overly bearish heading into the seasonally strong Q4? We think they are given only 22% of the investors surveyed by AAIL last week expect the equity market to be higher in the coming 6 months. Given this past week’s equity weakness, we expect this week’s survey to decline further. Bottom line: We view this contrary indicator to be potential fuel for a Q4 rally.

US 10-year bond yields remain resilient despite recent equity weakness. This week should prove to be important for interest rates given the Federal Reserve meets today (09/22) to discuss balance sheet and interest policy. Despite the recent sell-off in equities, the US 10-year bond yield barely declined and remains locked in a narrow range between 1.22-1.38%. We would need to see a decline below the blue band between 1.26-1.22% to signal a flight to safety away from riskier assets such as stocks. Until then, our outlook remains unchanged and judge the resiliency in bond yields as a positive signal with a move above 1.38% needed to confirm a broader bottoming pattern. Next key upside levels above 1.38% are at 1.45% and 1.53%.

Russell 2000 – Still range bound above key support at 2100 despite recent market volatility. Why do we continue to focus on the Russell 2000 each week? We view the small-cap index as one of the key measures of investor appetite for risk. We judge the recent pause that began in March to be part of a normal choppy trading range that develops for riskier stocks in the second year following a major cycle low like what developed in Q1 2020. Our view remains unchanged, expecting the Russell 2000 to resolve its 6+ month trading range to the upside and would need to see it break below 2100 to signal a more bearish outlook. We recommend that investors stay the course and remain patient.

Distribution of Ratings

For the purpose of ratings distributions, regulatory rules require member firms to assign ratings to one of three rating categories – Buy, Hold/Neutral, or Sell – regardless of a firm's own rating categories.

Although RBC Capital Markets' ratings of Outperform (O), Sector Perform (SP), and Underperform (U) most closely correspond to Buy, Hold/Neutral and Sell, respectively, the meanings are not the same because our ratings are determined on a relative basis.

Explanation of RBC Capital Markets, LLC Equity Rating System

An analyst's "sector" is the universe of companies for which the analyst provides research coverage. Accordingly, the rating assigned to a particular stock represents solely the analyst's view of how that stock will perform over the next 12 months relative to the analyst's sector average.

Distribution of ratings – RBC Capital Markets, LLC Equity Research

Rating	Count	Percent	Investment Banking Services Provided During Past 12 Months
			Count	Percent
Buy [Outperform]	787	55.70	318	40.41
Hold [Sector Perform]	575	40.69	173	30.09
Sell [Underperform]	51	3.61	4	7.84

As of March 31, 2020, RBC Capital Markets discontinued its Top Pick rating. Top Pick rated securities represented an analyst's best idea in the sector; expected to provide significant absolute returns over 12 months with a favorable risk-reward ratio. Top Pick rated securities have been reassigned to our Outperform rated securities category, which are securities expected to materially outperform sector average over 12 months.

Ratings: Outperform (O): Expected to materially outperform sector average over 12 months. Sector Perform (SP): Returns expected to be in line with sector average over 12 months. Underperform (U): Returns expected to be materially below sector average over 12 months. Restricted (R): RBC policy precludes certain types of communications, including an investment recommendation, when RBC is acting as an advisor in certain merger or other strategic transactions and in certain other circumstances. Not Rated (NR): The rating, price targets and estimates have been removed due to applicable legal, regulatory or policy constraints which may include when RBC Capital Markets is acting in an advisory capacity involving the company.

Risk Rating: The Speculative risk rating reflects a security's lower level of financial or operating predictability, illiquid share trading volumes, high balance sheet leverage, or limited operating history that result in a higher expectation of financial and/or stock price volatility.

Valuation and Risks to Rating and Price Target

When RBC Wealth Management assigns a value to a company in a research report, FINRA Rules and NYSE Rules (as incorporated into the FINRA Rulebook) require that the basis for the valuation and the impediments to obtaining that valuation be described. Where applicable, this information is included in the text of our research in the sections entitled “Valuation” and “Risks to Rating and Price Target”, respectively.
