There are a number of different risks associated with foreign securities and foreign currencies; including but not limited to country risk (political, social, and/or economic instability), native governmental, regulatory and taxation rules that differ from U.S. regulatory requirements or may be at odds with my stated investment objectives and/or currency risk. Before investing in any foreign security, I will become knowledgeable about that country’s political, social and economic conditions, as well as its tax laws and securities regulations and consider such factors in connection with all investment decisions.

Balances maintained in foreign currencies (non-USD currencies) not eligible for Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (“FDIC”) coverage nor any equivalent of such protection under the laws of any foreign jurisdiction and will not earn interest. Foreign securities and foreign currencies held with the intent to purchase securities are eligible for Securities Investor Protection Corporation (“SIPC”) coverage. Foreign currency transactions or investments in foreign currency are ineligible for SIPC protection.
